Working with Groups & Communities Intensive

26, 29, 30 June and 3 July 2010

An intensive that examines group processes and dynamics as an important aspect of the many forms of social interaction. Discover theory & practice designed to improve students' abilities to facilitate group functioning and individual growth in a group context, with particular reference to human services.

Join presenter Peter Willoughby over this four day intensive aimed at helping you to develop an enhanced ability to work with Groups & Communities including how to:

- ◆ Construct a Christian view of working with communities
- ◆ Appraise community participation & the social change processes
- ◆ Discuss & articulate developing self-awareness
- ◆ Know your values & how they affect you as group leader/participator/counsellor
- ◆ Identify ethical & professional issues in group practice
- ◆ Learn how group leaders can effectively work with issues of cultural diversity
- ◆ Understand differences between types of group work and group counselling

This intensive offers an exceptional study subject for counselling students and a valuable professional development opportunity for those already operating in social sciences, Counselling, teaching and ministry.

Study is available at audit (no assignments or assessment) or undergraduate and postgraduate level. Those electing to study at undergraduate or postgraduate level, will be able to count the 6 credit points that they have attained upon successful completion of the subject towards a relevant Social Science (Counselling) award.
